The final installment of the Sidonia's Thread trilogy wraps up the story of a mother and daughter who face an uncertain life in America with style after the Holocaust.

Marcus' books are filled with love, resilience, courage, and humor. She spends much of her time providing author talks to libraries, religious organizations, community groups, universities, and Jewish and other cultural centers, and tries to find precious moments for her writing. She has been called "one of the best lecturers [about a post-Holocaust life] of her generation."

"An intimate unapologetic peek into a mother-daughter relationship. It will have you re-examining your own relationship with your parent(s)."

Penny Goetjen, author of The Woman Underwater
